Federal Reserve Offers Lifeline for Spurned Debt

Greg Ip

Summary

The Federal Reserve delivered a shot in the arm to stressed financial markets by offering to take a big chunk of now difficult-to-trade securities temporarily out of circulation.

The offer amounts to a surgical strike at one of the most worrisome new developments in the global credit crunch: A wave of investor selling of mortgage-linked securities. The heavy selling is driving up mortgage interest rates, dealing a fresh blow to the flagging housing market, and threatening the nation's economy by making credit harder to come by.
