In August 2018 the Bank published a discussion paper on the Bank of England's future balance sheet and framework for controlling interest rates. The Bank intends to engage a wide range of market practitioners and experts in this dialogue, including participants in the Sterling Monetary Framework (SMF participants), to learn more about the demand for reserves over time and plans to update on the findings from this initial stage of work in publications and speeches.

Reserves accounts

Reserves accounts at the Bank of England are effectively instant-access accounts for firms that participate in the Sterling Monetary Framework. We pay interest at Bank Rate on these reserves. This means that overnight market rates stay close to Bank Rate, as there is no incentive for banks to borrow from or lend to each other at rates much different from Bank Rate.

The reserves accounts are held in our Real Time Gross Settlement system. Whenever payments are made between customers at different banks, they are ultimately settled by transferring central bank money (reserves) between the reserves accounts of those banks.

Reserves balances can be varied freely to meet day-to-day liquidity needs, for example to accommodate unexpected payment flows. In this way, reserves balances can be used as a liquidity buffer. The funds held in reserves accounts are therefore considered 'liquid assets' for the purpose of the Prudential Regulation Authority's liquidity requirements.

Operational Standing Facilities

Our Operational Standing Facilities (OSFs) allow firms to deposit reserves with or borrow reserves directly from us. Currently we apply the following rates to these two facilities:

- borrowing through OSF lending: 1.0%
- placing reserves with us through OSF deposits: 0.5%.

reserves via the OSFs, the loan is collateralised by Level A collateral. The deposit facility is uncollateralised.

We do not publish data on individual Operational Standing Facilities transactions. We publish aggregate data on OSFs drawings on the third Wednesday of the following maintenance period on the Bank of England Database.

Discount Window Facility

Our Discount Window Facility (DWF) is a bilateral on-demand service for firms experiencing either a firm-specific or market-wide shock. It allows firms to borrow highly liquid assets in return for less liquid collateral. This lending can be large in size and for a variable term.

We do not publish data on individual transactions within the Discount Window Facility. We update aggregate data on DWF drawings on the first Tuesday following the final working day of the calendar quarter, five quarters ahead.

Indexed Long-Term Repo operations

We offer funds to firms via an Indexed Long-Term Repo operation on a regular basis, usually once a calendar month. Normally, we offer funds with a six-month maturity. The rates charged on lending are indexed to Bank Rate. Participants are able to borrow against three collateral sets: levels A, B and C. The operation takes place as an auction in which firms bid for the size of borrowing they want.

Additional Indexed Long-Term Repo operations were announced by the Bank on 26 February 2019. For more details please see the below Market Notice.

Contingent Term Repo Facility

Our Contingent Term Repo Facility (CTRF) is a contingency liquidity facility that we can activate in response to exceptional actual or prospective market-wide stress. The CTRF enables us to provide additional sterling liquidity to the market, against the full range of collateral. We set the terms of the CTRF each time it is deployed, via a market notice including the size, term, frequency and price.
